While I already knew and accepted the idea that anger is a God-given emotion, one of the biggest things I took away from the book is the idea that our ability to get angry is linked to the fact that we are created in the image of God. When we perceive injustice or wrong doing, which may or may not be real legitimate injustice, we get angry.

of anger as a political resource that mobilizes black and white Americans differentially to exacerbate political inequality. Drawing on survey data from the last forty years, experiments, and rhetoric analysis, Phoenix finds that - from Reagan to Trump - black Americans register significantly less anger than their white counterparts and that anger (in contrast to pride) has a weaker mobilizing effect on their political participation. The book examines both the causes of this and the consequences. Pointing to black Americans' tempered expectations of politics and the stigmas associated with black anger, it shows how race and lived experience moderate the emergence of emotions and their impact on behavior. The book makes multiple theoretical contributions and offers important practical
