When composing music, it serves you to have a visualization of the relationship between chords and scales. A common visual way to present this is by the Circle of fifths. It is called so because every note is a perfect fifth away from the next, going clockwise (turning counterclockwise will instead result in fourth intervals). A composer knows, for example, that a D7 chord resolves into G, a G7 chord resolves to C and so on.

Composing electronic music is easier in some ways than composing music in the traditional manner. Those who already know how to play a keyboard can plug into their computers directly to create the sounds they want, and the computer will automatically record what is being played. (You can also learn to play the keyboard with Udemy.)
