Military Modernization and the Russian Ground Forces...

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY: One of the cyclical patterns of Russian history is the country's perpetual quest for military modernization. This quest was pursued by the Romanovs and the Soviets and continues in modern-day Russia. Military spending is always prioritized over essential economic and social reforms, hampering the country's competitiveness on the world stage and paving the way for its weakening and eventual disintegration.

Peter's distrust of the elitist and anti-reformist boyars culminated in 1722 with the creation of the Table of Ranks —a formal list of ranks in the Russian military, government, and royal court. The Table of Ranks established a complex system of titles and honorifics, each classed with a number denoting a specific level of service or loyalty to the tsar; this was among the most audacious of Peter's reforms.
