Smoke Testing. Smoke Testing is a software testing technique performed post software build to verify that the critical functionalities of software are working fine. It is executed before any detailed functional or regression tests are executed. The main purpose of smoke testing is to reject a software application with defects so that QA team does not waste time testing broken software application.

Test methodologies adopted by the Department of Environmental Protection include the snap-acceleration test, rolling-acceleration test, and power brake test for determination of exhaust smoke opacity from heavy-duty diesel vehicles (HDDVs). In a roadside environment the snap acceleration test is utilized.
